SPFII will present an overview of achievements made by indigenous women since the adoption of the Beijing Platform for Action in 1995, both at the national and international levels. In particular, the analysis is focused on relevant activities included in the national review reports submitted by States to the 59th CSW session within the areas of education and capacity building; indigenous women and health; violence against indigenous women and access to justice; indigenous women in power and decision making; the indigenous girl-child; indigenous women and poverty; and indigenous women and statistics, FIMI and other indigenous women organizations successfully advocated for the inclusion of Indigenous Women’s priorities at international level, and calls for concerted efforts at addressing the persisting violence, poverty, discrimination, racism, limited access to services and productive resources, and for opportunities to participate in decision making at all levels as priority concerns of indigenous women. The World Conference on Indigenous Peoples that took place at the UN headquarters on 22 and 23 September 2014 have a strong participation of indigenous women. The conference resulted in a concise, action-oriented Outcome Document, refers to indigenous women in paragraphs 10, 17, 18, and 19.
